

When Deb Mayer said four little words, "I honk for peace," in her classroom before the war in Iraq began, she could not have imagined that such an innocent, innocuous statement would lead to millions of teachers losing their right of free speech at school.

freespeechnation.org

When Deb Mayer said four little words, "I honk for peace," in her classroom before the war in Iraq began, she could not have imagined that such an innocent, innocuous statement would lead to millions of teachers losing their right of free speech at school.

freespeechnation.org

When Deb Mayer said four little words, "I honk for peace," in her classroom before the war in Iraq began, she could not have imagined that such an innocent, innocuous statement would lead to millions of teachers losing their right of free speech at school.

freespeechnation.org

When Deb Mayer said four little words, "I honk for peace," in her classroom before the war in Iraq began, she could not have imagined that such an innocent, innocuous statement would lead to millions of teachers losing their right of free speech at school.

freespeechnation.org

When Deb Mayer said four little words, "I honk for peace," in her classroom before the war in Iraq began, she could not have imagined that such an innocent, innocuous statement would lead to millions of teachers losing their right of free speech at school.

freespeechnation.org